

Communications Advisor (Medior)

Help build something that will last for generations

You will probably only get the chance once in your career to help build a project that will propel the Netherlands forward for decades to come. At NEO NL, we are working on the preparation and realization of two new nuclear power plants. In doing so, we are contributing to a reliable, low-carbon, and future-proof energy supply.

But our mission is bigger than just technology. We are also building a new organization. This requires professionals who like to take initiative, spot opportunities, and get energized by building. Not just building an organization, but building something that has lasting societal value.

Why this role?

At NEO NL, communication is not an afterthought, but an essential part of our societal mission. We operate in an administrative and political arena where diligence, transparency, and connection are central. That is why we are looking for a communications advisor who is curious, takes initiative, and knows how to find and tell stories.

You are not looking for an organization where everything is already set in stone. You are looking for an organization where you build communications together with colleagues. Communications for a project and organization in development.

What will you be doing?

- You write interviews, news items, web texts, social media posts, and articles that make complex topics easy to understand.
- You manage and develop our internal communication channels, including the company-wide newsletter and digital signage (narrowcasting).
- You develop communication materials together with external agencies and monitor quality, corporate style, and brand identity.
- You support meetings, events, and presentations, ensuring that communications are spot-on down to the last detail.
- You support the corporate social media approach and help to further strengthen the visibility of NEO NL.
- You actively seek out stories within the organization and translate them into content that appeals to colleagues and external target audiences.

Who are we looking for?

You are a communications professional who likes to take responsibility. You enjoy working independently, but also actively seek collaboration. You feel at home in an organization where not everything is set in stone yet, and where your ideas can truly make a difference.

- You are curious, politically and administratively sensitive, and can easily switch between diverse topics. Writing is not just a task for you, but something you visibly enjoy.
- Higher vocational education (HBO) working and thinking level / Bachelor's degree equivalent.
- At least three to five years of relevant experience in communications.
- Excellent command of both Dutch and English, spoken and written; English is the daily working language within NEO NL.
- Experience with content creation and an affinity for multimedia.
- A strong sense of administrative and political relations.

The kind of colleague that fits us best

- You take initiative: You spot opportunities and take action on your own.

- You love to write: You translate complex information into clear stories.
- You connect: You gather stories and easily collaborate with colleagues and external partners.
- You maintain oversight: You organize your work well and deliver quality, even when a lot is happening at once.
- You are meticulous: You understand that communication in a societal organization demands precision and reliability.

Why NEO NL?

- You will work on one of the largest societal projects in the Netherlands.
- You will help build a young organization where your ideas have a visible impact.
- You will be given plenty of room for initiative, responsibility, and personal development.
- You will work together with colleagues from different countries, disciplines, and areas of expertise.
- You will become part of a dedicated communications team that helps and challenges each other, and achieves results together.
- You will be part of the Strategy, Stakeholder Management, and Communications team, where we look at issues from an integrated perspective.
